Cod, Fennel, and Chorizo

Another Day In Paradise

JESSE JENKINS

JUL 13, 2025 • PAID

47 2

You can serve this hot or at room tempeture for lunch on a warm day. Its a li satisfying meal that leaves room for a few glasses of cold wine. The combir cooked and raw ingredients gives the feeling of salad and a hot side with lo natural sweetness and crunch. If you don’t eat chorizo, use a teaspoon of h paprika, and a few capers instead.

Ingredients - serves 2

2 cod fillets, skin on 50g spanish chorizo - diced
240g chickpeas - drained, skins removed (optional)
1 fennel bulb - diced + fronds
1 shallot - finely diced
1 red chilli - de seeded, finely diced
6 cherry tomatoes - quartered 1 handfull parsley - finely chopped
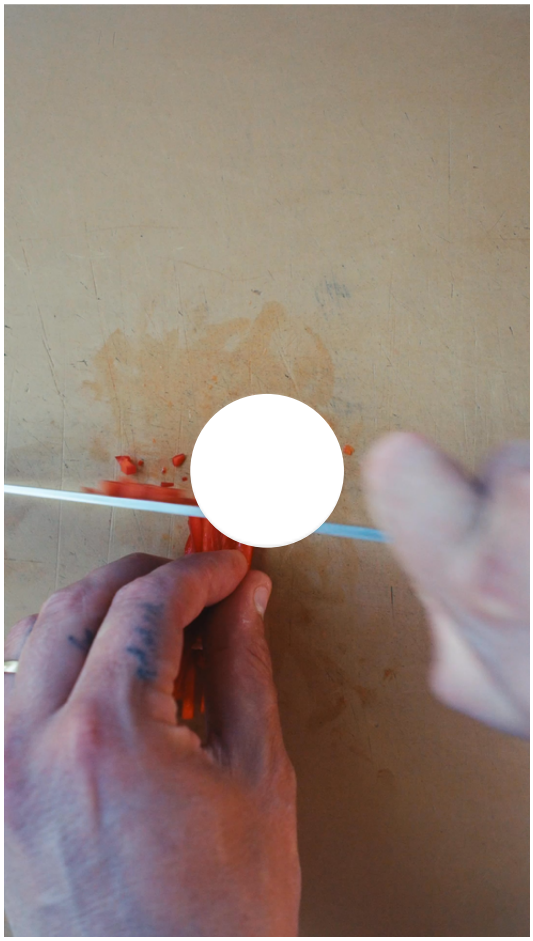
1 splash vinegar - I used moscatel, but sherry vinegar or a sqeeze of lemon
Plenty of olive oil

Salt to taste



Reserve a spoonful each of the raw chopped fennel, chilli, and shallot to mi at the end.

Add the chilli and shallot to a pan with a generous amount of olive oil over a high heat. Cook until fragrant then add the fennel, chorizo, chickpeas, and a of salt. Sauté for 5 minutes, then set aside while you cook the fish.

Season the cod fillets on all sides, then fry skin side down in enough oil to ju the bottom of the pan. Press the fillet into the pan firmly, then cover with a you have one. If you’ve got a thicker piece of fish like mine and you're trans the oven, you'll want to add a piece of parchment between the weight and t it might stick to the flesh as it heats up. Transfer to a 180c oven for 5–7 min until cooked to your liking.

Warm up the fennel and chorizo mix, then finish with a splash of vinegar an fennel, chilli, shallot, tomatoes, and parsley. Mix well and finish everything w fennel fronds and some nice grassy olive oil.

47 Likes · 2 Restacks

Discussion about this post

Comments Restacks

Write a comment...

© 2026 Jesse Jenkins · Privacy · Terms · Collection notice
Substack is the home for great culture